08.20.26 | BRIDGE THE GAPS

Protecting Liquidity When Care Needs Arrive Suddenly

Care rarely arrives on a schedule, and when something happens to a loved one the emotional weight is often immediate. On the heels of that comes the realization of having to figure out a web of logistics, like cash flow and access, while under pressure.

For many women, especially those who become the primary caregiver or financial decision-maker quickly, the first few days can feel overwhelming. Medical questions, family conversations, work responsibilities, household bills, and financial unknowns all seem like they are arriving at once. And for women without a strong support network, or for those managing more complex wealth, the pressure can be even greater.

That is why liquidity matters. Accessible resources can create breathing room, allowing you to make thoughtful decisions instead of rushed ones. At its simplest, liquidity means money or assets that can be accessed relatively quickly without creating unnecessary disruption. Think cash in a checking account, savings that can be transferred easily, or other resources that are available without having to sell long-term investments at an unfortunate time.

Just as important, liquidity also means knowing where money is, who can access it, and which accounts should not be touched first. For example, a household may appear financially secure on paper, but if most assets are tied up in retirement accounts, real estate, trusts, private investments, or accounts one spouse has never accessed, the family may still face a short-term liquidity problem. More assets do not always mean faster access.

THE FIRST 72 HOURS

When a caregiving need arrives suddenly, it is easy to feel as though every decision must be made at once. But in the first few days, the goal is to keep the system stable via making sure essential bills can still be paid, care-related expenses can be covered in the near term, and key information is accessible.

For example, is there enough cash available for immediate needs such as transportation, temporary care, prescriptions, home safety modifications, or family travel? Are regular household bills still being paid? Does someone have access to the accounts needed to manage day-to-day expenses? Are key documents available, such as powers of attorney, healthcare proxies, insurance information, and contact details for doctors, attorneys, accountants, and financial advisors?

© 2026 Grimes & Company Wealth Management, LLC (d/b/a Grimes & Company) | One Technology Drive, Suite 100, Westborough, MA 01581

This is also the time to identify who can help. Who will be able to coordinate medical appointments? And who might be able to communicate with family members? Are these the same person, or different point people? A professional advisor may be able to help review financial resources, account access, and planning trade-offs. Even when you feel responsible, you do not have to carry every role alone.

WHAT TO KEEP LIQUID, AND WHAT TO LEAVE ALONE (FOR NOW)

The practical question revolves around which money should be used first, and which money should be preserved if possible. In many cases, the most useful liquidity is a reserve of cash or savings that can cover near-term care expenses without forcing bigger financial decisions too quickly. At the same time, it can be helpful to pause before using long-term assets to solve short-term needs.

Selling investments quickly during a stressful moment can create tax consequences, disrupt an investment plan, or lock in losses during an unfavorable market period. Drawing from retirement accounts may also have consequences that deserve careful review. Those resources may need to be used at some point, but they should be considered thoughtfully, with a clear understanding of the trade-offs.

Before drawing from portfolio assets, review other possible sources of support. Are there insurance benefits available? Does a long-term care policy exist? Are there employer benefits, leave options, disability benefits, or care coordination resources? Are there healthcare reimbursement accounts or other benefits that may help? Is another family member willing and able to share certain expenses?

For higher-net-worth families, liquidity planning can be surprisingly important. Wealth may be spread across investment accounts, real estate, business interests, trusts, or estate planning structures. That complexity may support long-term goals, but it can also slow down access when decisions need to be made quickly.

Liquidity can give you time to understand the care need, talk with family, review insurance, consult trusted professionals, and make decisions from a steadier place. It can help prevent a short-term crisis from forcing long-term financial choices before you have the full picture. It is making sure you have room to think and giving you a starting point. And in a caregiving season, a clear starting point can be a powerful form of confidence.

IMPORTANT DISCLOSURES:

Please remember that past performance is no guarantee of future results. Different types of investments involve varying degrees of risk, and there can be no assurance that the future performance of any specific investment, investment strategy, or product (including the investments and/or investment strategies recommended or undertaken by Grimes & Company Wealth Management, LLC (d/b/a Grimes & Company), or any non-investment related content, made reference to directly or indirectly in this blog will be profitable, equal any corresponding indicated historical performance level(s), be suitable for your portfolio or individual situation, or prove successful. Due to various factors, including changing market conditions and/or applicable laws, the content may no longer be reflective of current opinions or positions. Moreover, you should not assume that any discussion or information contained in this blog serves as the receipt of, or as a substitute for, personalized investment advice from Grimes. To the extent that a reader has any questions regarding the applicability of any specific issue discussed above to his/her individual situation, he/she is encouraged to consult with the professional advisor of his/her choosing. No amount of prior experience or success should be construed that a certain level of results or satisfaction will be achieved if Grimes is engaged, or continues to be engaged, to provide investment advisory services. Grimes is neither a law firm nor a certified public accounting firm and no portion of the blog content should be construed as legal or accounting advice. A copy of the Grimes' current written disclosure Brochure discussing our advisory services and fees is available for review upon request or at https://www.grimesco.com/form-crs-adv/. Please Note: Grimes does not make any representations or warranties as to the accuracy, timeliness, suitability, completeness, or relevance of any information prepared by any unaffiliated third party, whether linked to Grimes' web site or blog or incorporated herein, and takes no responsibility for any such content. All such information is provided solely for convenience purposes only and all users thereof should be guided accordingly. Please Remember: If you are a Grimes client, please contact Grimes, in writing, if there are any changes in your personal/financial situation or investment objectives for the purpose of reviewing/evaluating/revising our previous recommendations and/or services, or if you would like to impose, add, or to modify any reasonable restrictions to our investment advisory services. Unless, and until, you notify us, in writing, to the contrary, we shall continue to provide services as we do currently. Please Also Remember to advise us if you have not been receiving account statements (at least quarterly) from the account custodian./

© 2026 Grimes & Company Wealth Management, LLC (d/b/a Grimes & Company) | One Technology Drive, Suite 100, Westborough, MA 01581